Sweet stuff: Pepsi, Coke turn to corn syrup

Pepsi-Cola USA and Coca-Cola Co. yesterday announced they have decided to use corn syrup as the sole sweetener in some of their most-popular soft drinks.

In Purchase, N.Y., Pepsi-Cola USA—a division of Pepsico Inc.—said it has raised the level of high-fructose corn syrup to 100 percent for Pepsi-Cola and regular Pepsi Free in bottles, cans and fountain syrup.

Pepsi's approved corn syrup levels for bottled and canned soft drinks had been at 50 percent since April 1983 and at 80 percent for fountain syrup since September, 1983.

In Atlanta, Coca-Cola's domestic soft-drink division said it will use 100 percent corn syrup as the sweetener for bottled and canned Coca-Cola and caffeine-free Coca-Cola.

In May, Coca-Cola boosted the amount of corn syrup used in fountain syrup for Coca-Cola to 100 percent.

The tilt to corn syrup buoyed stocks of corn millers, such as A.E. Staley Manufacturing Co., American Maize Products Co., and Archer-Daniels-Midland Co., which rose on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday.

"It's wonderful news," said a spokesman for Decatur-based A.E. Staley. "Our company had worked long and hard to get the major colas to use 100 percent fructose."

On Nov. 1, Pepsi-Cola announced it would drop saccharine and use only the artificial sweetener NutraSweet, or aspartame, in all its diet sodas.

Pepsi-Cola President Roger Enrico expressed the hope that the switch would catapult his company into the top sales spot in the $5 billion diet soft-drink industry.

Coca-Cola ranks No. 1 in the diet drink market, but Pepsi-Cola is the largest over-all marketer of soda drinks.
