Letter from the Director

The 2 NPCC shows are just around the corner. I will be attending both the Chicago meet and the Des Moines meets. I hope that several of you will be at one or the other of these shows. We need the exposure and it is a good time to make new friends, renew old friendships, and build your collection.

I am finding out that the jobs of Editor, Director, Treasurer, Show Chairman, etc. are too great a load for me. I never seem to find time to balance work, play, and charity. I have always said if it weren't for work I could get a lot done. It isn't fair to the club as I put the little free time I have into the Can-O-Gram at the expense of the other club functions. Lately I've spent no time working on our constitution or on attracting membership. I have set up a bookkeeping system for the club but that is still needing some attention. What am asking for are volunteers to take some of these positions. It doesn't matter which position you want but I will no longer devote time to them all. So read the job descriptions in this Can-O-Gram and consider helping.

I had an interesting internet experience last month. While looking through ebay I found a seller listing several different brands of early, good condition, soda cans. All of the auction titles started with a date which if I remember correctly was 1966. Being curious I went further into the auctions to read the descriptions and view the bids. Several items were getting a lot of action. In the descriptions I noticed these consignments were found in an attic or duct work. This threw up some red flags for me as I have done a lot of construction. No self respecting construction crew would only drink one of each brand of a soda. So if these cans were remnants of a working crew there had to be more. I emailed and asked the seller how many of each brand were found. The seller replied in a grand fashion "would I believe over 100!" Wow, I thought to myself to bad the seller had neglected to include that tidbit of info in the auction descriptions. Feeling this was really important I took the info and emailed all of our NPCC internet database. No big deal I thought as I did not want any of my collecting friends to get in a bidding war only to find out what I now knew. The seller found out what I had done and needless to say I got the impression from his email he was not happy with me. Was the seller being unscrupulous? No. Would I warn my friends again? Yes. A small find such as this can really change the collector value of an item. But as we all know it is nice to add harder to find items to our collections. These finds are a 2 edged sword so be on your toes when trading on ebay. Have fun and please be observant.

How a Two-Piece Can is Made

By Christian Cavalletti

Extruded body

Cup drawing The large coil of metal (steel or aluminum) is unwound, lubricated with a thin film of oil and fed continuously through a cupping press that blanks and draws thousands of shallow cups every minute.

Ironing and Doming Each cup is rammed through a series of tungsten carbide rings. The walls of the cans are raised and thinned into their final shape. The ironed body is completed by formation of the bottom dome.

Trimming Trimmers remove the surplus irregular edge and cut each can to a precise, specific height (trimmed body).

Washing The trimmed can bodies are passed through highly efficient washers to remove oil, then dried; in case of aluminum cans a washing process with a zirconium salts solution is done to make aluminum clean and shining in preparation for coating.

Coating The clean cans are coated externally (clear or white pigment) then dried, to form a good surface for the printing inks.

Printing A die for each color (up to 6) is prepared; the die transfers its image's ink to a rubber carpet; the carpet transfers the whole design to the can. In the modern machines the over varnish process is applied: after last color printing, a coat of varnish is applied. In this case the coating process is avoided and result is a can with more protected colors (especially to sun fading) and more mobility (slides better on filling lines).

Rim-varnish A coat of varnish is applied to the base of the can (rim) to avoid secondary corrosion (from the outside) and make it more mobile on the filling line.

Drying The cans pass through a second oven, which dries the inks and varnish.

Inside lacquer The inside of each can is sprayed with lacquer to protect the can itself from primary corrosion (from the inside) and its content from any possibility of interaction with the metal. The decorated and lacquered body passes through an oven at about 400°F which allows the polymerization of the lacquer.

Come on Board and Help the NPCC

The NPCC has immediate needs to fill some of the staff positions below. Please review these and volunteer for the sake of your club.

1) Director: One of the first priorities of this position will be to get a constitution, we also need to incorporate, and then this position will need to keep tabs on all aspects of the club. The Director also needs to make a bimonthly report to the NPCC through the Can-O-Gram.

2) Treasurer: Needs to handle the finances. Coordinate with the Editor and Membership Director to reimburse their regular expenses. May need to set up a club bank account that has a debit card and be linked to PayPal and Bid Pay on the internet.

3) Show Chairman: Will require you to be able to handle advertising, arranging, and organizing new shows or existing shows.

4) Editor: By far the most demanding and important job of the NPCC. This person must have a PC and internet access. They are required to assemble the Can-O-Gram newsletter. They will seek out ads, articles, cartoons, and anything worthy of note for our hobby. It helps to be willing to be a member of other soda related clubs but is not necessary. This position easily takes 40 to 60 hours to design, assemble, print, and mail the Can-O-Gram.

I am willing to stay on as Editor, the other 3 jobs, or give them over to new blood but I no longer want to do them all.

All these positions will require some juggling with how they all interrelate. All positions need people who are willing to put time into them. All positions need a person who is self motivated and willing to create the position and make it solid.

All interested parties who wish to be considered and/or need more information contact Bruce Mobley at his address listed inside the cover.

FOR SALE: The NPCC has shirts for sale. These are white pull-overs with the patriotic NPCC Logo emblazoned on the front. All funds go to help NPCC keep our membership fees down. All sizes (small, medium, large, X large, XX large, XXX large) with shipping included are only $15 each. To order state size wanted and send order and payment to Bruce Mobley // co: NPCC // PO Box 163 // Macon, MO 63552.

Need help from you. Each can is made by companies, which send their empty cans to a bottler. To recognize the can-makers there's a small symbol, usually near the barcode. For example, Rexam as "REXAM", Ball Company has "Ball", Crown Cork and Seal has a "crown", and so on.

Together with the symbol there's also a code composed of letters and/or numbers which correlates to the day, month, and shift when the can was made. I'm studying these codes to understand when a can was made if this is not clear from the can itself. This is my last frontier in cataloging cans and I would really like to be able to understand these codes and to share the information with other collectors. A problem I am encountering is it's not easy to understand which symbol corresponds to which company. Especially when researching old cans and small companies. If I'm able to do this I have to find a contact within that company, a reference detailing this information, or someone (maybe you) who has this information already. If the contact is within a company then I have to try and convince them to give me the key to understanding the code. At the moment I have been able to find this info for the 3 big companies I mentioned before Rexam, Ball, and Crown Cork. Now I need somebody who is in contact with can-makers or/and knows about symbols of old company (for example, Rexam was previously National Can Company with a symbol similar to a N with long arm). Is there anybody who can help me? Maybe you know something that can aid me? Have a nice day. Ciao, Chris Cavaletti #1199

Necker It can be done in two ways.

1-Using the spin-necker, which bends the can's neck with an evident edge and horizontal streaks.

2-Using the die-necker (made with an inside and an outside anti-rub pottery dies to avoid damage to varnish) which bends the neck with a soft curvature (recognizable by the small vertical lines). Using more heads with progressive tools is possible to reduce the neck till the desired final dimension: 209 with one tool, 206 with 6 tools, 204 with 8 tools and 202 with 10. Subsequent steps make the ribbed neck with the same tool.

Flanger The top of the can is flanged outwards to make the flanged body, to accept the end once the can has been filled. At the same time, on the bottom, another tool, the reformer, do a small engraving inside the rim, which makes the dome more resistant to the inside overpressure.

Testing Cans not in conformity with quality standards are automatically rejected and the metal is recycled.

- 1-Light tester: To detect flange defects or pinholes;
- 2-Foreign-can detector: To detect outside printing defects;
- 3-Video inspection: To see dents and foreign objects.

Packaging Cans in conformity with quality standards are placed on pallets for delivery to customers.

Top end

Shearing The special alloy aluminum coil is cut into sheets that are fed through a press that stamps out the maximum number of ends. At the same stage the edges are curled.

Lining The ends passed through a lining machine, which applies a very precise bead of compound sealant around the inside of the curl. A video inspection system checks the ends to ensure they are perfect.

Tab A narrow width coil of aluminum is cut into strips, which are pierced and cut to form tabs.

Linking The ends pass through a series of die, which score them and attach the tabs, which are fed in from a separate source.

Packaging The retained ring pull ends, ready for capping the filled cans, are packaged in paper sleeves and palletized for delivery to customers.

Can Preservation

The following tips can be used to help us preserve those treasures that we have spent countless hours pursuing and acquiring. We certainly don't want these minor treasures to deteriorate into unrecognizable pieces of corrosion.

Let's first consider where we store or display our collections. Ideally we should try to keep these items in an environment that is friendly to them. Low humidity is a must as humidity can create spotting on the surface of the cans. Enough humidity and you get condensation which can lead to all out rust. Places with a dirt floor should be avoided for moisture reasons and cleanliness. Basements are great as long as the humidity levels are kept in check and there are no flooding problems. Out buildings with concrete floors, good drainage, and non leaking roofs are excellent. But you must keep in mind we using non heated buildings that certain geographies can have below freezing weather so the cans must be definitely be EMPTY.

What about protecting the labels? Can wraps are a thin sheet of plastic that are wrapped around the body of the can and offer great protection against scratching and scuffing. One draw back with a can wrap though is water ever condenses under the wraps it cannot escape and will rust the can. It is best to remove these if you plan to store any can for a long period of time. But if you are hauling you trade stock around to swap meets these are a must for all collectors. Handling will pose the greatest threat to the label of can. Can wraps can be purchased through the BCCA. Their web site is www.bcca.com/.

Cleaning and waxing the labels of our cans can really enhance their looks and preserve them at the same time. I like a product called Meguiar's Cleaner Wax. This is an automotive finish product that is easy to use, gives superior results, and doesn't yellow. It will clean some stains, surface rust, and then leave a nice shine. This can be found in the automotive section of most stores. Speaking of yellowing don't use floor wax on a can unless it acrylic floor wax but I would only recommend using this on dumpers cans that are heavily rusted.

Collector Spotlight

By Christian Cavaletti

Bob Luciano #0434 is a long time member of the NPCC, 35 years old, married, with 2 daughters ages 8 and 6.

Bob has been collecting since age 10 when he found out that the guy across the street had a beer can collection. At that time, "I couldn't drink beer so soda can collecting made sense."

Today he collects Coke and Pepsi cans from around the world and one of each brand of soda from the United States, so in his collection there are about 3000 different Coke cans, 1500 different Pepsi cans and 1000 different United States cans.

Lately he has been interested in older cans from the 1950's and 1960's too: "I am especially proud of the Clicquot Club low profile cone top (the original soda can) that I picked up on ebay for $40. It's in rough condition but has no holes and is displayable."

He has a funny idea about the reason why he collects cans: "I believe I've enjoyed collecting for so long because I'm not intensely into collecting. Two months might go by where I have done nothing to build my collection. Then the next two months I make 3 huge trades, buy special commemorative cans at the store, and attend a trade show. I am casual about my collection, yet extremely proud of its variety and worth." He usually enjoys attending trade sessions as he considers them an opportunity to share the enthusiasm of soda cans with other people who have an interest.

One of the more memorable people he has crossed paths with is Rich Simmons #0864. "He has the most outrageous Coke collection. I strongly doubt there is a better collection of red Coke cans (no diet, or caffeine free, etc.) in existence. Rich and his lovely wife have opened up their doors to me on several occasions. Each time is an opportunity to joke around with Rich and see his collection. Most people are satisfied getting a Coke Diamond can or two. Rich has one from almost every country in the world!"

Over the years Bob has traded hundreds of cans, he has enjoyed meeting people, buying, selling, and of course "finding that elusive can that's been out of reach".

Coca-Cola Belgium is following up its highly successful Coke light Art programme with a with the Coke light Fashion Edition 2003, a collection of special edition cans and fashion accessories, designed by five cutting edge Belgian designers.

From April to June, 800,000 'designer cans' will be given away at Coke Light® sampling sessions in shops, clubs and bars across Belgium. In addition, each designer has created an exclusive fashion accessory to go with his or her can, which will be available for purchase during Coke light Fashion Day at the end of May.

Coca-Cola Belgium produced a 'look book' to introduce the collection to the press, similarly to how fashion journalists review a collection at a catwalk show before the clothes are modelled.

The theme of the new can designs is 'seduction,' and reflects a range of influences and ideas. The collection is varied and exciting, a testament to the energy and creativity that characterise the new generation of fashion designers in Belgium.

Those dumpers can use a lot of help too. Especially when we first bring them home from their would be graves. Good old soap and water are a good start on this process. But there will still be some rust that can be removed. I have used solutions of acid in water but this requires that the can be rinsed extremely well to stop the action of the acid, or even dipping them in a solution of baking soda. If the acid isn't completely removed it will continue to eat up your prized find. Sometimes you will find the rust was what was holding the can together and you will end up with some tremendous holes using this method. I like a method using a toothbrush and a cleaning compound called Bar Keepers Friend. It is a scouring powder that has a tiny bit of oxalic acid mixed in. It works good but do be careful when scrubbing as you can scrub through the label. Experiment first and get a feel for it. Once finished I like to dip my dumpers into a good quality acrylic floor wax. This seems to do a decent job of halting the process of rusting.

Don't look at this as being a chore. As I said earlier we spend significant time collecting and we want to maintain our cans appearance and even its value. If you use some of the techniques documented here you will be rewarded with some great looking cans that will be around a long time.

Can-O-Gram Letters

Pepsi's Patriotic (??) New Cans ... To drink or not to drink?

Pepsi has a new patriotic can coming out with pictures of the Empire State Building and the Pledge of Allegiance on them. But Pepsi forgot two little words on the pledge, "Under God." Pepsi said they did not want to offend anyone. If this is true then we do not want to offend anyone at the Pepsi corporate office. If we do not buy any Pepsi products then they will not receive any of our monies. Our money, after all, does have the words "Under God" on it. Pepsi doesn't have the right to rewrite the Pledge Of Allegiance! If you agree with this policy, please pass this word to everyone you know. If you do not agree, just (ignore) this message. You have the right to do this. This is America, after all. Tom Kirschbaum NPCC

HIGH TECH COLLECTOR

By Lance Meade

Recently I moved my website

(www.canconnection.com) to a new server, the reason for the move was I was running out of storage space. While searching for a plan that offers more storage I came across www.powweb.com they offer only one plan, 500MB for $7.77 a month with free set up. I made the switch. Not only did I double my storage space I was able to cut my cost in half! So if you're looking for an inexpensive hosting site you may want to check them out. Of course you could always use a free site such as www.tripod.lycos.com, which I did use for a while, but I quickly ran out of space.

Did you know that Double Cola was originally named Jumbo Cola? The name changed in 1933 when they started to use 12oz bottles, which at that time was twice the amount of cola than any other brand. Jumbo Cola also claims to have been the first beverage to use applied color label bottles. Is this true? To read more interesting facts about Double Cola or Ski (which is a very tasty drink) visit www.double-cola.com.

Older cans just keep bringing higher prices on Ebay. Recently the Hires can brought $619.09 and the Regent Root Beer cone top ended at $1025.00.

As always please email me at lance@canconnection.com or mail to Lance Meade/1330 Carriage Hills Dr/Cambridge/MN/55008.
